

History

Intent

Our History incorporates the expectations of the National Curriculum and has been extended to explore modern day historical periods to enable the children to develop their understanding of the shaping of modern-day Manchester and the UK. The intent is to give children the knowledge and skills to understand: the past, their place in the world, how their diverse community has formed through the teaching of ancient civilisations and significant historical periods. It will ensure children have the ability to draw on their understanding of the past by confidently challenging and analysing sources. This will give them the ability to question and challenge stereotypes and conflicting views. Ultimately, it will allow them to thrive in a world of mass information, misinformation and different perspectives.

Rationale

In History, we start each lesson with a key question, to instil awe and wonder, and help guide the children towards answering this themselves, either through passionately imparting knowledge or giving them opportunities to infer it from a source. Units should start with chronology knowledge and skills to develop the child's understanding of dates and this unit's place in history. Once this is established, children should then move on to enquiry. We teach these historical skills in a similar way to reading, deciphering sources to infer and discover things about the past. Each unit should be a journey of discovery. Like reading a story, we also want the children to explore past worlds, learn about the 'main characters' of the past, see perspectives and build an image of that unit in their minds to help them retain the key knowledge. With our enquiries completed, we are now able to reason and evaluate our understanding of the unit through a range of informed responses, before then discussing deeper historical concepts around empathy and understanding. Discussions should be used to develop empathy and perspective: we want our children to notice injustice, question decisions, celebrate triumphs and be aware of why the world is how it is today.
